PROFILES OF GLOBE STAFFERS WHO WON PULITZERS

John S. Driscoll

John S. Driscoll, 49, is executive editor of The Globe. He joined the Globe 26 years ago and has been a reporter, copy editor, news editor and managing editor of the daily, evening and Sunday papers. In addition, he has been supervising editor of the Spotlight Team, except for a two-year period, since its inception in 1972.

Born in Medford, he now lives in Topsfield with his wife, Dolores, and four daughters. He is a 1957 graduate of Northeastern University.

Driscoll has participated as reporter or editor in projects that have won Pulitzer Prizes, the Associated Press Managing Editors Public Service Award, Sigma Delta Chi, New England Sevention Brown and United Press International Public Service Awards, Headliners and others.

Norman Lockman

He began his newspaper career in high school as a sports writer at the Kennett News & Advertiser. As an arm of the U.S. Air Force, he edited the weekly newspaper at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

In 1969, Lockman won an award from the Maryland-Delaware-DC Press Association for local columns and last year he won the Massachusetts Legislative Caucus media award for government reporting.

A national board member of the Unitarian Universalist Asn., he lives with his wife and three daughters in Wayland.

Gary McMillan

Gary McMillan, 39, joined The Globe in 1980 and has worked as assistant metropolitan editor, chief of the copy desk and in reporting on education, City Hall, urban affairs, New England politics, energy and crime.

McMillan covered school desegregation in Boston and shared in the Pulitzer's Public Service Award given to The Globe in 1975. McMillan was born in Oregon, served in the Air Force and worked for the Harvard (Mass.) Daily Review and the Worcester Telegram before coming to Boston. He lives in North Easton with his wife, Lois, an assistant at The Globe's Living section, and their family.

Stan Grossfeld

Stan Grossfeld, 32, joined The Globe in 1975 and is now its chief photographer. He began his career at the Star-Ledger in Newark, N.J. He is a four-time winner of the New England Photographer of the Year award, and has won first place awards from the Associated Press and the Boston Press Photographers Asn., for his coverage of the violence in Northern Ireland.

He received a Bachelor of Science degree from the Rochester Institute of Technology in 1973 and a Master's in Journalism from Boston University in 1980.

When he learned in October that he was being sent to Lebanon, Grossfeld decided to tell his mother, a New Orleans schoolteacher, that he was assigned to Lebanon, N.H., to minimize her worry.

But his sister, a New York lawyer, recognized his paycheck and distinctive walk on television.

Kirk Scharfenberg

Kirk Scharfenberg, 40, is deputy editor of The Globe's editorial page. He has been employed at The Globe for seven years. Previously, he worked at the Berkshire Eagle, the Washington Post, the Baltimore Sun and the Springfield Union.

Born in Boston, Scharfenberg is a graduate of Brown University. He has won several annual UPI and AP awards for editorial writing in New England.

He lives in Dorchester and is the father of three children, Christa, David and Stephanie.

David Wessel

Wessel is a native of New Haven, Conn., and a graduate of its public schools. He graduated from Haverford College, majoring in economics, in 1978, and became a reporter for the Middletown (Conn.) Press.

He joined the Hartford Courant in 1977 and left in 1980 to be a Walter P. Bechdel Fellow in business and economics journalism at Columbia University.

He and his wife live in Rye, N.Y. He has a daughter and a son.

Ross Gelsbhan

Ross Gelsbhan, 44, has been the specialist/special projects editor at The Globe for most of the five years he has been working at the paper.

He began his career in 1961 as a reporter for the Philadelphia Bulletin. He has worked for the Washington Post, the Village Voice, and Gnippe-Howard in New York, where he also taught at Columbia Journalism School.

Gelsbhan worked as an editor at the Boston Herald American for about 15 months before joining The Globe in July 1979.
